My camera is a digital stage. A curtain goes up for an image in a fraction of a second, and then down again. No applause. Later, I sort out and expose every image to light, almost like a memory.

An empty spot on an island in Sweden. Seats in the park for possible happenings.

Goeteborg.

Cairo. Mohammed is not only a muezzin, but also a runner up in Qur'an reading contest. What's more, last year he came in 5th place at the Egyptian Weightlifting Championship (140 kg).

The remains of the Palace of the Republic, Berlin. In a few weeks 78,000 tons of history was removed – the last great building that reminded Berlin of its GDR. The mirror façade was a large backdrop. There are only staircases with emergency exits left.

The bridge over False Creek in Vancouver is built of steel. But the investors didn't want the steel beam aesthetic. So the beams are disguised as a charming house in which nobody ever lived. The house windows are walled up and there's no door.

An improvised guard station in front of a film studio.

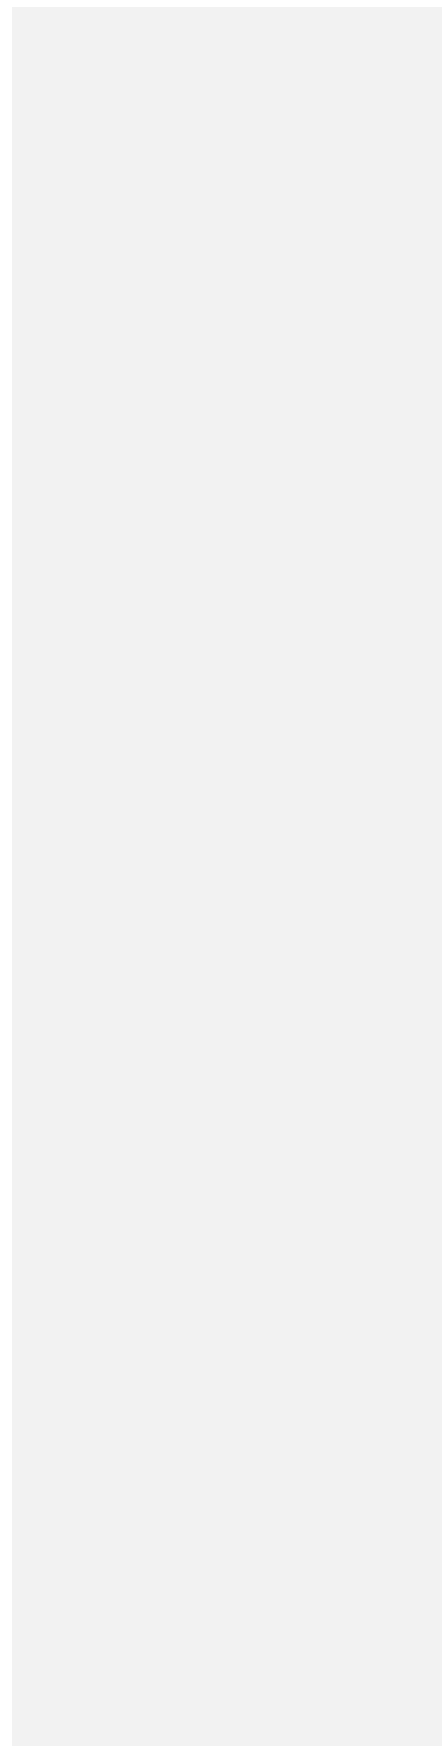

A sightseeing tour in Zürich. Why can't we just be born with wheels?

Barajas International Airport, Madrid. Transportation from terminal to terminal. The train rides without a train driver- and with no passengers. Here the world operates without people.

When Morron wants to shag Russia, he bites her neck. But what he doesn't know is that he is castrated. He can't do what his instinct wants him to do.

A theme park, "Holy Land" in Buenos Aires, is the biggest open-air performance in South America. One by one, groups of tourists can witness The Communion, The Banishment from the Garden of Eden, or The Crucifixion. Even the cleaning staff wears historical costumes. Every 30 minutes an 18-meter-tall Jesus is reborn over the Mount of Olives. Every 5 minutes a jet flies 30 meters high over Bethlehem in the air corridor of the adjacent airport...
